Finance Tips for New College Grads Seeking Employment

Graduates need to realize how much their credit history can impact their future. As more hiring departments take personal finances into consideration, recent college graduates need to make sure their credit and debts are in order.

→ If you do not already have a job lined up, contact your student loan service provider immediately to ask for a six-month deferment. Most loan providers will do this for you right after you graduate without much difficulty.

→ Pull a free copy of your credit report at www.annualcreditreport.com and review it to make sure you are aware of all your existing creditors and debts.

→ Look for credit cards that you may have opened while in college and consider closing accounts that you do not plan on using, to help limit your exposure to identity theft. However, keep in mind that it is good to maintain at least one active credit card account, which you use and pay in full every month, to build your credit score.

→ If a prospective employer requests a copy of your credit as part of the application process, be prepared in your job interview to be up-front about any negative marks on your credit.

→ Check with the registrar's office at your school to make sure you do not owe anything to the school (library fines, parking tickets, etc.).

→ If you are moving after graduation, be sure to let the post office and your creditors know of your new address. Otherwise, you may miss important statements or letters.

→ Keep your expenses as low as possible while you are getting started. Staying with your old roommates or parents for a period of time to build some savings can really pay off.

→ Develop a budget--your spending plan--early on. Decide how much you'll spend in different areas including groceries, dining out, and clothing.

→ Once you land that first job, start to develop good saving habits. Start a direct deposit into savings. Sign up for your employer's retirement plan--especially if there's a match.

→ Ask for help! If you are paying high interest rates on your credit cards; if you're struggling with the amount of your minimum payments on credit cards, or if you need help in developing a game-plan for your finances, speak with a non-profit credit counseling agency like GreenPath.

GreenPath offers MEM members assistance with personal and family budgeting, debt repayment, plus avoiding bankruptcy, foreclosure, and repossession.

Savings Account Transfer Limits

Federal Regulation D limits outgoing transfers from savings accounts. While members can transfer into savings accounts as often as they like, federal regulation limits how many times members can transfer money out of these accounts in any one statement period. Members are limited to six (6) outgoing transfers per month from a savings account.

Types of transfers that are limited to six (6) include:

- Online transfers
- Automatic transfers to cover overdrafts
- Pre-authorized payments or transfers through the Automated Clearing House (ACH)
- Wire transfers
- Checks, Point of Sale (POS) transfers, drafts or similar orders payable to a third party

Types of transfers from savings accounts that are not limited to six (6) include:

- ATM transfers and withdrawals
- Branch teller transfers and withdrawals
